Orton-Gillingham and Thinking Skills

The activities in this book is an attempt to integrate Orton-Gillingham and thinking skills such as categorizing or classification. They are organized by sounds and then by syllabication patterns. For most of them, the students decode the words first and then complete the worksheet. It should be noted that the teacher may want to do these in class as opposed to giving the worksheets for homework. Additionally, the focus is primarily on developing thinking skills so there is a problem of these activities not being consistent with the Orton-Gillingham sequence. Teacher discretion is necessary.

“Phono 21”

This game is similar to “Twenty-one Questions” and presents an opportunity for students to integrate Orton-Gillingham and critical thinking skills. The teacher writes on the board the sounds that have already been studied in class. The following is an example:

Consonants
(b, c, d, etc.)

short vowels
(a, e, i, o, u)

sh, th, ch, wh

letter combinations
(-ng, -nk)

Vowel digraphs
(ai, ay, ee, oi, oy, ea, ou, ow)

R-controlled
(er, ar, or, ir)

The teacher tells the children that she is thinking of a sound. She calls on a student (or one of the teams) who then asks a question such as, “Is the sound a vowel digraph?” or “Is the sound voiced or unvoiced?” The teacher answers “yes” or “no.” The student then makes one guess by saying the sound, letter name, and/or keyword. If the answer is “no,” another student is called to ask a question and makes a guess. The game proceeds until a child guesses correctly.

Before or after the game, the teacher asks students to describe strategies they would utilize or which proved to be effective in this game.

Doubling and Silent-e Rules

Doubling Rule: If you have a 1-1-1 word (one syllable, one vowel, and ending with one consonant), you will double the ending consonant if the suffix begins with a vowel).

Silent-e Rule: If a word end with a silent “e,” you will drop the final “e” when adding a suffix that begins with a vowel.
